2 Letters to the Editor

4 Seeing Red: Creating a Red-Team Capability for the Blue Force

Colonel Gregory Fontenot, U.S. Army, Retired

Red teaming, a structured process executed by trained and practiced team members, is uniquely suited to critical analysis.

9 Perceptions and Courses of Action toward Iran

Jo-Anne Hart, Ph.D.

U.S. misperceptions about Iran significantly affect policymaking and unnecessarily close off policy options.

Current and Future Warfighting

22 Battle Command: Toppling the Tower of Babel

Colonel Stuart A. Whitehead, U.S. Army

Future network battle command systems should be commander-centric and seamless, but achieving that vision means traveling down a rocky road.

26 Don't Follow the Bear: Soviet Attempt to Build Afghanistan's Military

Major Stephen D. Pomper, U.S. Army

The Soviet experience in Afghanistan during the 1980s provides many lessons for contemporary military operations.

30 Using Biometrics to Achieve Identity Dominance in the Global War on Terrorism

John D. Woodward, Jr.

To achieve identity dominance, the U.S. military must make maximum use of biometric information and the technologies that collect, process, store, and search data.

35 North Korea: Government-Sponsored Drug Trafficking

Lieutenant Commander Cindy A. Hurst, U.S. Naval Reserve

North Korea vehemently denies this, but evidence to the contrary is mounting: The government of North Korea is engaging in drug trafficking.

38 Ten Misperceptions about North Korea

Lieutenant General Michael M. Dunn, U.S. Air Force

Many believe it is almost impossible to know North Korea's true intentions. Here Dunn demystifies North Korea to expose its aims.

40 The New Master of Wizard's Chess:
The Real Hugo Chavez and Asymmetric Warfare

Colonel Max G. Manwaring, U.S. Army, Retired, Ph.D.

To defend the sovereignty and greatness of his country, Chavez advocates a "Bolivarian Revolution." To understand Bolivarianismo's implications, we must first understand 4th-generation warfare.

50 International Law and Terrorism

David E. Kellogg, Ph.D.

Conducting terror warfare without intentionally committing criminal breaches of the Geneva Conventions is near impossible. Can we do so without incapacitating our Armed Forces?

58 Unprivileged Belligerency: The IRA

Colonel Michael F. Noone, Jr., U.S. Air Force, Retired, S.J.D.

During the 1970s Troubles in Northern Ireland, legal problems arose. Irish Republican Army members claimed they were at war. Were they?

64 Sidewise Technologies: National Security and Global Power Implications

Paul Bracken, Ph.D.

A focus on newer technologies often distracts from the possibilities for innovation that older, mature technologies offer.

68 Chinese Army Modernization: An Overview

Lieutenant Colonel Dennis J. Blasko, U.S. Army, Retired

U.S. military experiences in Transformation should provide some appreciation for the difficulty the PLA faces in executing its modernization program. The PLA's progress deserves close study and objective analysis.
